Finders Keepers

Sunday October 18, 2009

Sometimes, I feel like my relatives must be the most forgetful people in the planet. I've seen them forget where they put their keys, their cell phones, their game systems, their wits, the list goes on and on. They'd probably forget where their legs were if they weren't attached to their bodies.

True story: There was a big commotion once because one of my relatives wanted her knife back and the person who borrowed it couldn't remember where she put it. The knife would surface a few days later after another relative almost sat on the knife while getting into the backseat of the borrowing relative's car. I guess when you've got to peel an apple, ya' just got to peel it no matter where you (or your car) may be.

Needless to say, my relatives were the first people to come to mind after I found out about the EZ-Find tracking unit. The product comes with a "finder" unit and a set of tags that you can attach to stuff you don't want to forget. Knowing my relatives, though, they'd probably misplace the finder unit, which then makes the whole point moot. More "normal" folks, however, can find out more about the device by checking our EZ-Find review¹.
